Older Driver Safety Awareness Week

Driving Safety for Older Adults

December 2 to 6 is Older Driver Safety Awareness Week. Given 18% of all traffic fatalities are people who are 65 years of age or older, it is important to learn about senior safety on the road.

Changes Influencing Seniors on the Road

Given how experienced most of them are as drivers, it can be hard for seniors to accept there are safety concerns about their driving. It's important for them to know this isn't because they are "bad drivers."

Age-related changes that affect driving for seniors include:

- Limited vision or hearing
- Decreased reaction time, judgment, or attention due to health conditions
- Poor posture
- Weakness when operating a steering wheel, brakes, etc.
- Memory loss that leads to getting lost or confused
- Medications that impair judgment and reaction times

Night-time driving exacerbates the effects of these changes on senior safety as well.

Conversation Starters about Seniors' Road Safety

Driving can be a sensitive topic for seniors. Use these questions to start conversations:

- Have you noticed any scratches or dents on your car recently?
- Have you experienced anything frightening on the road lately?
- Do any of your medications affect how you feel when driving?
- Are there any signs on your usual route that have been hard to spot?
- What's the best route to get between (two points senior should be familiar with)?
- Would it be helpful to you if you didn't have to drive all the time?

Look for a CarFit Program

Did you know there is a national program called CarFit that offers free senior driver safety checks? Qualified volunteers take 20 minutes to assess seniors' vehicles and make recommendations to improve safety. Look up events near you at car-fit.org.

Home Care Tip

Many public, private, and non-profit transportation providers offer discounts or free rides to seniors. Contact a local Area Agency on Aging (AAA) for listings near you. For non-emergency medical transportation, contact Medicaid. If a senior is struggling with the idea of driving less, encourage them to try these affordable options and experience how much freedom they will still have.
